- 25X1 1. As of 1950, a large Soviet military installation was located near Alabino (N 55-32, E 37-00), not far from the Alabino Railroad Station, but source does not know exactly how far. Source thinks that a railroad spur ran into this military area, which source estimated to be approximately two km. square. In the early part of World War II, this installation consisted of some buildings of a permanent type of construction, while others were of a temporary barracks type of construction. Because of the permanent nature of some of the buildings, source thinks that the installation is probably active at the present time.
- 25X1 2. This military installation was known as "Camp Alabino of the Moscow Military District". Training, primarily summer, of Soviet Army infantry, artillery, and signal units of the Moscow garrison took place at this camp. Source knows of no other type of training given at this camp, other than basic training. There was always a large number of troops, more than a division, at this camp. Source thinks that there was a permanent party stationed at the camp.
- 25X1 3. This camp was also used as a military supply (clothing and equipment) depot.
